Graduating with top honors and an unquenchable passion, Patrick found himself on the open-team, launching big-market restaurants in Washington, D.C., and Boca Raton, Florida. Such leadership roles pushed his education in seafood, sustainability and high standards to the next level. But then it was time to take a break and Patrick found himself full circle, back home in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Now a seasoned restaurateur and chef who has been around the culinary block, Patrick finds himself involved in a new and remarkable local project set to open in Emerald Isle, in the spring of 2016. After approaching Keith Byrd and Travis Burt, who are currently constructing a three-story, state-of-the-art building to headquarter their Inc. 5000, third-party logistics company, Patrick was asked to take the helm as head executive chef and managing partner of Caribsea Restaurant. The restaurant will be located on the third floor, providing diners with incredible views of both the ocean and the sound while they enjoy upscale modern coastal cuisine with rich historical inspiration.
